Why to choose #bioSnick products?

#bioSnick packaging is our brand for biodegradable and compostable products. These items are always certified and testify our strong commitment to circular economy.

Bagasse is the fibrous sugarcane pulp remaining which is used in many different industries

For packaging, the bagasse is then dried & pressed into a board and rolled

The bagasse is then moulded into packaging products

Compost is used to enrich nutrients in the soil

Sugarcane is harvested with the juices extracted to make raw sugar and molasses products

After use, the bagasse product can be disposed of either with your compost food waste or via commercial recycling

According to EN 13432, to be considered compostable a material must meet all the following requirements:

- Biodegradability: metabolic conversion of the material into carbon dioxide. If the material biodegrades by 90%, in less than 6 months it is considered biodegradable in all aspects (EN 14046)
- Degree of disintegration: the material fragments and loses visibility in the final compost. The residues of the material tested for three months that exceed 2mm in size must have mass that is less than 10% of the initial mass (EN 14045)
- No heavy metals: presence tolerated only if below set limits
- Absence of negative effects on the composting process
- Absence of negative effects on the quality of the compost: agronomic value and reduced ecotoxicological effects on plant growth. A test is performed to observe plant growth in samples of compost in which the material under observation has completed degradation.
- Alteration of chemical-physical parameters following degradation ( pH, N, Mg, K, saline content, volatile solids)

How does sugarcane fiber compare to alternative packaging?

Sugarcane fiber is an excellent replacement for paper products, as well as, EPS/XPS food boxes and plastic packages. EPS/XPS food boxes is a known environmental hazard, and it presents some human health hazards, too. It takes 500 years or more to break down and consumes 30% of the space in every landfill. Moreover, 20% of EPS/XPS food trays doesn't end up in a landfill at all, instead polluting our oceans and littering our ground.

Despite legislation in European Union banning EPS/XPS food boxes, its popularity persists. Its acceptance is mostly due to the fact that it's lightweight and cost effective and can maintain internal temperature.

Sugarcane fiber products present a comparable and affordable alternative to EPS/XPS food boxes and paper products in the food packaging world. They also boast a wide range of other benefits:

- Tolerant of high temperatures (up to 120°C)
- Grease and water resistant
- Durable
- Freezer safe
- Microwave safe
- High insulation properties (internal temperature maintenance)

Some studies suggest that fruits and vegetables stored in sugarcane fiber packaging have longer shelf lives. Because bagasse fiber is highly porous, it also absorbs extra moisture and promotes breathability and a drier environment for produce.

Our sugarcane fiber products perform as well as wood fiber products, and are produced according to EN 13432 directive.

The advantages are clear when you compare bagasse to alternatives such as paper, wood pulp fiber, EPS/XPS , and petroleum-based plastics.Sugarcane fiber packaging is a sustainable and environmentally friendly alternative that is durable, microwave safe, insulating, and impervious to high temperatures. Head to head, it matches up on the must-haves, and it's cost effective too.

What are the environmental benefits of #bioSnick products?

Twenty million trees are cut down every single year just to manufacture paper cups. Most of those cups are coated in polyethylene, a derivative of fossil fuels. What's worse, one single paper cup takes longer than 20 years to break down in a landfill.

Additionally, around 40% of the wood that we harvest is used for commercial and industrial applications. This overuse of wood leads to biodiversity loss, deforestation, water pollution and contributes to greenhouse gas emissions.

By providing an alternative to tree-based paper products, sugarcane fiber presents immense potential.

Eco-friendly materials possess three characteristics: They're renewable, biodegradable, and compostable. Sugarcane fiber is all three.

Renewable - Around 1.2 billion tons of sugarcane are produced annually. From this, 100 million tons of bagasse are created each year. While some of this bagasse is burned as biofuel, much is discarded. Bagasse packaging production finds a new purpose for this agricultural byproduct that would otherwise have been disposed of reducing waste and supporting farmers.

Biodegradable - We wish that all products ended up in local composting facilities but the reality is they often do not. It's essential to plan for the reality of products ending up in landfills and on the side of the road. Biodegradability ensures that a product can break down on its own over time. Sugarcane fiber can biodegrade within 30 to 90 days.

Compostable - In commercial composting facilities, post consumer sugarcane products can break down even faster. In as little as 60 days, bagasse can be composted entirely. When composted, bagasse turns into a nutrient-rich fertilizer of nitrogen, potassium, phosphorus, and calcium.

Sugarcane fiber is now prominent in the ethical material sphere, and it's being used in several different industries and products.

French Fries

French fries are prepared by first peeling and cutting the potato into even strips. These are then wiped off or soaked in cold water to remove the surface starch and thoroughly dried. They may then be fried in one of two stages. Cooks generally agree that the two-heat technique produces better results. Potato starches of the "medium" type have a water content resulting in soggy fries. "Over-frying" is for spuds that have been cut and fried for a while.

Chefs cook the most right outside on the street from organically fed hogs — factory farm animals aren't allowed — and their dishes are accompanied by local craft beer.

Championship event that awards trophies — a wooden stick trophy to the winner.

Successful contestants at the late September early October event will be mindful of the superstitions surrounding the preparation of the pig-based dish.

Fun reasons lost in the mists of time, or in large steam from the wassailan, porridge must always be served in a "clockwise." The meal must always be stirred clockwise. The finished product must always be taken from a pottinger, or "pottinger bowl," standing up.

Foods, perhaps, but this meal and its traditions have kept Scots healthy and sturdy for generations — and even inspired many.
